

Giggles, groans and laughs

By IFAN PAYNE

REVIEW

WHETHER or not an individual production turns out to be good, bad or indifferent, is not as important as the fact that theatre-goers should pack the St Stephen's Theatre Space, Cardiff, every night from now to the end of the month.

At any point in time theatre cannot continue to exist, let alone thrive, on re-production of old plays any more than music can continue to live on time-worn performances of Mozart and Tchaikovsky alone.

Thus the importance of the St

Stephen's season of new theatre works, presented under the rubric of Watch This Space!!! and of the second production in the series, Bernard Latham and Phyl Harries's Wales According To Gags.

The string of giggles, groans and deep belly laughs produced by Latham and Harries was an unpretentious delight. Like all good comedy the most telling moments were the few, well chosen serious lines.
